

CONCEPT PAPER: HARMONY 連

A group dedicated to innovate the creation

Summary

This document introduces "HARMONY 連" (pronounced "ren", meaning union in Japanese), a collaborative working group built to unite creators and break the chains of monotony.

I have struggled for years developing projects alone, slowly, never having finished a single product, because my passions across multiple fields divided my attention.

With the working group HARMONY 連, I intend to create an environment where we can learn, study and build products, services, games, electronics and forth together, turning ideas into finished creations or evolving projects.

Passion is a bonfire and it needs sanity to burn, thus every member's wellbeing shall be considered. HARMONY 連 isn't about wasting time, draining wallets, or sucking out anyone's life force. It's a space to grow, to build something meaningful, and to finish what we start.

After this raw proposal, I invite anyone who intends to pursue such a journey, together.

Background

The electronics, gaming and many other industries are chained by legacy-driven systems that restrict innovation and user freedom over products or services. Independent creators, such as developers, artists, media makers, 3D modelers, and freelancers face significant hardships when trying to bring their ideas to life, given the limited resources, lack of collaborative networks, dominance of established platforms and user habits.

Regulatory and political decisions often shape paths that aren't advantageous or even disadvantageous to those independent creators, favoring established giants while squeezing out the little lives.

This background barely illustrates what HARMONY 連 was born for.

I want to gather people who reject the constraints of tradition and policy, who want to create on their own terms. By pooling our skills, sharing knowledge, and focusing on practical development, we aim to produce original work and bring something new, not to bend or rely on monopolized systems.
